HAPPY HOLIDAYS

FROM THE MISSOURI STATE BOARD OF NURSING

PHILOSOPHY FROM FLO

We have all been bombarded with facts and figures, ad infinitum, proving the existence of the current nursing shortage. It may well be documented in history as the nursing shortage to end all nursing shortages. I plan here to add more thoughts to an already over-analyzed issue:

The November, 1988 issue of Nursing Management contains an article by Kate Fenner, Executive Vice President of Compass Group, Inc., Cleveland, Ohio. The author states that data analysis indicates the nursing shortage is worsening, as evidenced by:

- 13.6% vacancy rate in total RN positions.
- Up to 70% reported annual turnover rates in nursing staff positions.
- Projected shortage of 600,000 nurses by the year 2000.
- 12.6% decline in full-time BSN enrollments in 1986.

None of this appears optimistic for an easy, quick end to the nursing shortage. Figures indicate this shortage is more critical and of greater proportions than has been experienced in previous shortages.

One aspect of criticality of the nursing shortage, an apparent change in quality of nursing care, has become increasingly apparent to the Board of Nursing. The impact of the nursing shortage on the quality of nursing care is a topic of conversation with practicing nurses almost everyday. The numbers of complaints received against licensees in the area of chemical abuse, are increasing rapidly. At the same time the proportion of complaints having to do with incompetence, professional misconduct and dishonesty, and the gross neglect of delivery of what has in the past been considered appropriate nursing care is also increasing. I believe those increases are directly related to the shortage of practicing nurses.

Health care as we know it has come to be viewed as a fundamental necessity and for most of us a right. That fact along with rapidly changing technology has impacted ethical and legal influences. Professional liability litigation is at an all time high, liability insurance rates are making astronomical leaps and physicians are reportedly being forced out of practice due to increasing risk factors in providing health care.

In the past nurses have been considered poor targets for law suits. Because of being relatively low salaried individuals they have not been considered "deep pockets" and thus not likely to have high insurance coverage nor great personal wealth. Nurses have in the past also projected a rather passive professional image and have not been seen to be a dynamic group, thus avoiding exposure as responsible decision makers.

PHILOSOPHY FROM FLO (CON'T)

Nurses are now in increasing numbers becoming the objects of litigation, still generally in conjunction with hospitals and physicians, but nevertheless in increasing numbers. As nurses care for an increasing patient load, are used in critical situations for which they are not prepared, float from one understaffed area to another in the hospital, work double shifts and work as agency nurses or alongside agency nurses who work in areas with which they are unfamiliar, the possibilities of litigation are ever increasing.

Directors of Nursing are most often between a "rock and a hard place" in staffing problems created by this nursing shortage. On the one hand they realize most acutely the need for maintaining the safety of patients yet are under fiscal pressure to keep beds open and hospitals operating in the black. What an unenviable, thankless position! (What do you people do to relieve your stress?) I receive many calls from Directors of Nursing who are most concerned about the liabilities of staff nurses involved in these critical situations.

There are, however, some positive aspects to this issue. It is bringing to the attention of the public, as never before, the role of the nurse and scope of practice of nurses whose functioning has in the past been taken for granted. Bringing to the attention of the public the plight of nurses serves to give nurses increased political clout and thus enhances the ability to influence needed legislation and the ability to make other needed changes. Nurse leaders now have an increasing opportunity to impact professional as well as economic conditions for all nurses as well as the ability to improve delivery of health care.

In the meantime-----what?

Each nurse is charged with maintaining the safety of all clients entrusted to his/her care as well as maintaining the status of his/her individual license to practice. Each of us must become acutely sensitive to the legalities of every situation in which we practice and if push comes to shove, it becomes necessary at those times to ask - "What is most important to me"? My answer is "My license"!!! How do I maintain my license and the ability to legally practice as a nurse in the State of Missouri? The secret resides in the fact that we each must monitor our own individual practice. To monitor my practice I must know my capabilities and abilities. I must know what activities I can perform safely, what I need assistance with in order to be educationally prepared to perform specific, given tasks and once I know that, hold firm to my beliefs of what my practice can safely entail. I am the only person who can know "ME" to that extent, therefore, I am totally responsible. I must be able to say "Yes, I can do that" or effectively and appropriately say "No, I cannot safely do that unless -----". I must attain and maintain control of my own professional life at all times because I am the only individual responsible for me, my behavior and my license to practice nursing.

COMMENTS FROM CAROL

Rumors are flying about the July 1988 NCLEX-RN examination! While we have heard rumors that Missouri had a 49% failure rate, the truth is that the failure rate for first time candidates educated in Missouri, regardless of where they wrote the examination, was actually 15%. The failure rate for this Missouri group was 12% in February 1988 and 8% in July 1987.

The national failure rate for first time writers in July 1988 was 16%, compared to 13% nationally in February 1988 and 8% nationally in July 1987.

According to the National Council of State Boards of Nursing's Director of Testing Services, Jennifer Bosma, PhD, "The adoption of a revised NCLEX-RN test plan by the 1987 Delegate Assembly meant that a new criterion-referenced passing standard for the examination should be established. The passing standard in effect through February 1988 was set in 1982. A change in the content framework of an examination is an event which indicates that a passing standard should be re-evaluated. Over time a passing standard needs periodic re-examination to reflect the effects of changes in practice and changes in the level of competence required to practice at a minimally safe and effective level. For licensing examinations, it is appropriate for passing scores to change in response to these kinds of factors that are determinants of public health and safety." The percentage of first time writers in Missouri who would have failed the July 1988 examination under the old 1982 standard was 14%.

The following information, formatted as questions and answers, was provided by Dr. Bosma and is reprinted here in part with her permission.

1. We are experiencing a nurse shortage. This new passing standard will only make things worse. Please comment.

It is true that many jurisdictions are reporting shortages of nursing personnel. However, the function of professional regulatory boards is to protect the public health, safety, and welfare. It is therefore inappropriate to consider supply and demand issues when establishing passing standards for licensure examinations. Stated differently, the public is ill served by the licensure of individuals who fail to meet the requirements of minimal competence regardless of the number of such individuals at any particular point in time.

2. Why is there a new passing standard? Why couldn't we continue to use the old standard?

Standards need to be examined periodically to determine whether or not practice has changed to any significant extent. It is logical to do so when there is a significant change in the test content.

The old standard, set six years ago (1982), was based on the skills and competencies needed to practice nursing at that point in time. The most recent NCLEX-RN job analysis reflected changes in those skills and competencies. These changes, in turn, may reflect the increased severity of illness and complexity of care required by the hospital patient population (Secretary's Commission on Nursing, July, 1988). Those changes were incorporated into the new test plan. Changes in test plans require a re-examination of the existing passing standard. This re-examination resulted in the establishment of a new passing standard.

3. The changes in the test plan were relatively small. Why, then, was there such a big change in the number of failing candidates?

There is no relationship between the magnitude of change in the test plan relative to the magnitude of change in the standard. The change in the test plan reflects changes in the frequency and criticality of tasks performed but does not directly address the level to which these tasks must be performed in order for competence to be achieved. Thus, these factors, tasks and level, can vary independently of one another, e.g. a large change in one could accompany a small or large change in the other. And, of course, both changes are completely independent of changes in the candidate population.

What has changed is the definition of the 1600 passing standard relative to the number of correct items needed to pass. However, the number of items needed to pass NCLEX-RN 788 was only increased by three.

4. Not as many people failed the old test. Could it be that the new test is unreliable?

There is no evidence to support this claim. In fact, the reliability index for the current sample population is .88. Previous reliability indices have ranged from .86 to .89.

5. Is the new test simply more difficult?

No. The policy used by the Examination Committee has not changed with the new test plan.

As in the past, the average percentage of candidates correctly answering each item is between 65 - 75%. The average for the July examination was 69%. If the test was more difficult, these percentages would have been lower for items in the July 88 NCLEX-RN.

6. What, then, is different this time?

In addition to changes in the knowledge and skills needed to practice nursing in 1988 relative to those needed in 1982, it is very likely that changes in the NCLEX-RN candidate population are also responsible for the increased numbers of failing candidates.

According to the Interim Report of the Secretary of Health and Human Services' Commission on Nursing (July 1988):

COMMENTS FROM CAROL (CON'T)

"It appears that students presently interested in nursing as a career are no longer the high achievers, as measured by formal examination, of years passed."

This observation is supported by 1986 data that indicate that the "SAT scores of high school students interested in nursing careers were well below the national average for college-bound students." Moreover, even though SAT scores for all students seem to be improving slightly, the SAT score gap between nurses and non-nurses seems to be widening (Green, 1987).

Additional data indicates that the high school grade point average of nurse aspirants is lower than that of non-nurses. According to Green (1987), one-third more non-nurses reported high school grade point averages in the A/A- range whereas a larger proportion of nurses reported the C/C+ grade point averages.

There is also evidence that shrinking applicant pools have necessitated the implementation of remedial programs within many schools of nursing, e.g. 70% of responding public institutions and 40% of responding private institutions (Rosenfeld, 1987).

Finally, the candidates' actual performance on NCLEX-RN 788 reveals that the average ability level for the first-time, U.S. group was substantially lower than those for previous July administrations. In fact, the national failure rate would have been three percentage points above the July 1987 rate even if the passing standard had not changed.

ALZHEIMERS REPORT
DEPRESSION IN THE FACE OF DEMENTIA

The question is frequently asked - how common is depression in patients with various dementias, what are the suicide risks and how does one recognize depression in a demented individual.

As a general rule, major or chemical depression is more common in patients with multi-infarct (small strokes) dementia (MID) than Alzheimers's Disease (AD). In AD the risks of depression and suicide attempts are the highest in the early stages of the disease - when the individual still recognizes that something is wrong. As the disease progresses - the incidence of depression and suicide attempts actually diminishes. In MID, however, the risk of depression is higher and may be present at any stage of the illness. These patients can also pose an active suicide risk throughout the course of illness. Consequently, they need close monitoring and supervision.

Diagnosing depression in a patient with dementia is often challenging. The symptoms and signs of dementia may mimic those of depression and vice-versa. For example: is the patient not eating and losing weight because of depression or because they are forgetting to eat due to their dementia. Are they less interested in things because of depression or because they can't comprehend them as a consequence of cognitive impairment. The best way to diagnose depression in a patient with dementia is to have a high index of suspicion especially in MID patients and in early AD. A sudden worsening of the patient's cognitive functions may be due to depression. More profound apathy, energy, or anorexia and insomnia should also make one suspect depression.

Major, or chemical depression in patients with dementia response well to anti-depressant medications and supportive/directive therapy. Though we may not be able to cure the underlying dementia, vigorously treating depression will minimize suicide risk, improve quality of life and make patients more manageable in their own surroundings. A variety of medications and even electro-convulsive therapy may be of benefit. There is some evidence that patients with dementia may preferentially respond to the MAO inhibitive type of anti-depressants.

A psychiatrist with experience in geriatrics can be invaluable in both diagnosis and treatment of suspected depression in demented patients.

The task force to consider standards for advanced practice will begin with three (3) Board members and one (1) actively practicing representative from Certified Nurse Midwives, Certified Registered Nurse Anesthetists, Missouri Nurses Association and a Nurse Practitioner group.

The members of the task force have been selected and the first meeting will be held January, 3, 1989. A report from that meeting will be presented to the members of the Board at the January 9-13, 1989 meeting.
